Acknowledgements Summary

In the acknowledgements of When the World Tips Over, the author expresses profound gratitude to numerous individuals and organizations who contributed to the completion of the novel. Comparatively, writing the book felt like fitting a vast quilt into a small envelope, symbolizing the immense challenge it presented. The author extends heartfelt thanks to the editorial team at Pippin Properties, Inc., including Holly McGhee, Marissa Brown, and others, who provided invaluable insights and support throughout the process. The author highlights their literary agent Holly McGhee for her fierce dedication and passion, likening her to a vital horizon.

The editor Jessica Dandino Garrison is praised for her creative input and unwavering trust, making the editing experience both enlightening and enjoyable. Acknowledgment is also given to the Penguin Young Readers team for their support and enthusiasm, notably for Jen Loja, Nancy Mercado, and the design contributions by Jenny Kelly and Theresa Evangelista. The author appreciates the global outreach facilitated by Rights People in the UK and mentions several editors and translators who have helped bring the story to a worldwide audience.

Special mention is made of friends and peers like Tim Wynne-Jones and Marianna Baer, who provided early feedback and moral support during challenging times of writing. The author expresses thanks to medical professionals for their assistance, as well as to booksellers, librarians, and educators who advocate for literature against censorship.

On a personal note, the author dedicates the book to family—particularly the mother, father, and siblings—whose unwavering support has been instrumental. The mention of friendships with long-standing companions emphasizes a deep-rooted connection that enriches the author's life. Lastly, gratitude is directed to the writing community, including faculty and fellow writers, and a specific acknowledgment to MacDowell for a rejuvenating residency experience that helped complete the novel. In closing, the author affirms the importance of these relationships, stating that amidst life's challenges, joy always prevails thanks to the support system surrounding them.
